

Sonali Ashar - A shore thing

Down by the sea, a coastal home designed by Sonali Ashar takes a quiet approach to luxury. Set against a backdrop of verdant lawns and an unhurried ocean, the architecture sits back, letting the view lead. The holiday home reads minimal at first glance—white walls, deep monochrome accents, a single scarlet thread, but it's inside that rhythm builds. Twin sunken lounges break the living space into two temperaments, one tuned for conversation, the other for quiet. Custom sofas, aged timber, artisanal soft furnishings soften the geometry while sliding apertures frame the palms and let the sea breeze in. A centrally located dining but it's inside that rhythm builds. I win sunken lounges break the living space into two temperaments, one tuned for conversation, the other for quiet. Custom sofas, aged timber, artisanal soft furnishings soften the geometry while sliding apertures frame the palms and let the sea breeze in. A centrally located dining room doubles as a daily rendezvous space. Beyond it, garden paths in stone and wood stretch towards the shore. Built to switch between solitary mornings and lively sundowners, this second home balances comfort with an extroverted edge.
